1

Prompt and clear communication

Successful graduate students work hard at responding promptly to emails and other correspondence.

A learning mindset

They are constantly reading, learning, and willing to challenge their own understanding and knowledge.

Focused work

The willingness to work long and hard on the tasks at hand, actively removing distractions during work hours.

Proactive

They take charge of their own learning, projects, and career.

Humble-minded

They tamp down their pride in order to be better listeners and collaborators.

A prosocial orientation

The best graduate students care deeply for the welfare of others around them.

Not consumed by work

Good work-life routines that prioritize sleep, rest, exercise, and healthy relationships.
